Hiya folks! Here's the Two-Ton Tina issue at last. It wasn't easy to fit such a large lady into such a little comic book, but I finally made it. Maybe I'll reprint in 8.5 x 11 size if this little one proves popular. And why shouldn't it? Everybody likes Tina. A true lady with a big heart, a big... Well, big everything, really. She's such a sweetheart that she probably wouldn't physically hurt you just for violating my copyright. But I would. If you make unauthorized copies of this comic, I'll wait for my chance, coldcock you from behind, douse you in oil, and set you on fire. A horrible way to go. So forget any criminal plans, lean back and...

ENJOY THE SHOW!

"A GEISHA for GANESHA"
 Alessandra Kelley 1991 ©
 Two-Ten Time ©/Kjetil Arndsson

Ganesha is an Indian protector god. After he was born, his mother, Parvati, wanted to be left alone. Shiva, her husband, came along while she was sleeping and wanted to wake her up, and Ganesha, not knowing who the hell Shiva was, tried to fight him off (making him the only god crazy enough to ever try and fight Shiva). Shiva, being Shiva, cut off Ganesha's head. When Parvati awoke, she was so upset that Shiva cut off an elephant's head and put it on Ganesha's shoulders. Amazingly, this worked. Equally amazingly, Ganesha remained a sweetheart. He's also known for writing the Vedas and transcribing the Mahabharata. The rats, because of their tenacity and ability to get into impossible places, are Ganesha's companions.
